PREFACE.

This bibliography had its origin in the vexatious experience of the Record Room that the labour involved in printing early records is only equalled by the facility with which they are lost sight of when printed. The attempt to compile a list of records printed by the Bengal Record Room proved, however, to go a very short way towards giving a comprehensive list of printed records concerning Bengal during the Company's administration. This has now been revised to comprehend all records of this period which have been printed, not only by the Bengal Record Room but also by the Government of India Record Room and by the India Office, and by private editors with the authority of these Record Rooms. A section has also been added comprising narratives and treatises written by actors in the political events up to 1772, amongst the pages of which are scattered numerous official letters, and extracts from other records, not printed elsewhere. The result is hoped to be that this bibliography now gives a fairly complete list of first-hand authorities on the Company's administration in Bengal up to the arrival of Warren Hastings. For the period subsequent to that date, it does not claim the same completeness; the voluminous literature associated with the trial of Warren Hastings, and the papers of Parliamentary Committees, for instance, not being touched on. It does, however, continue to give a complete list of Bengal records, printed and published as such, up to the time of the Mutiny.

Mention will be found in the Catalogue of Historical Records in the Bengal Record Room of a few items of printed proceedings not specifically mentioned in this bibliography. In general, however, it was not the practice in Bengal during the Company's administration to print current documents simply for the purposes of record. This practice prevailed after the Mutiny and at present there is no consultation or letter of importance which is not preserved in print from the beginning. The result is that for the post-Mutiny period there exist untold volumes of unpublished but printed material, the original autograph records of which have been destroyed, while for the earlier period the general bulk of the records is extant only in manuscript. The printed papers of the pre-Mutiny period will therefore gain in importance, as the bulk of the manuscripts out of which they have been selected succumbs, with baffling rapidity, to the climate of Bengal.

The writer takes this opportunity of acknowledging suggestions received from Mr. H. Mitchell, Superintendent of Records, the India Office and Mr. A. F. M. Abdul Ali, Keeper of Records to the Government of India, for the inclusion of volumes overlooked in an earlier edition.
